His father was finally persuaded by the boy to give his consent, and the latter remained with the marines. A short time before he was killed the young soldier wrote he had purchased five Liberty bonds, setting aside a portion of his pay each month for them.

America's men know how to fight.

That fact becomes more and more firm ly established with each day's reports of those who have died or suffered for the cause which took them 3,000 miles from their homes.

A striking example of the kind of men who are now plunging ahead through the ranks of the battered Huns is furnished by Lieutenet Homes.

A pay each month for them.

John F. Vermaclon, sergeant, killed in action on July 27, gave a wonderful demonstration of the spirit of the American soldier on the day he met his death. He was hit in the head by a piece of shrapnel, just as he went over the top. Struggling to his feet, and despite the remonstrances of two of his comrades, he insisted on plunging ahead. He received his death wound a few minutes later.
